PRESIDENT'S RAMBLINGS.....THE TRAVELOGUE

Hi all, it's winter travelling time again for us and we find ourselves wandering around Eyre Peninsula, staying at places for a few days that we previously drove straight through on our way to somewhere else. The beaches on the coast vary from big smooth flat stones to beautiful white sandy stretches complete with seaweed. Then of course there are the cliffs of the Bight with the caves created by the erosion from the Southern Ocean big seas. Away from the coast just about all we see is cropping land, acres, no hectares, no square kilometers, in fact 80% of the land mass here, sown to wheat, barley, canola and lentils however minimal rain through April and May have seen farmers dry seeding and hoping for the rain to follow, then they have the added problems of mice eating the grain before it germinates. We have had some light rain this last week so hopefully they will get more soon.

As we drive through the areas, we see the small towns, more like community hubs central to an area supporting hardware store, pub, bakery (haven't found a bad one yet), butcher, chemist, small but well stocked supermarket and other small stores. Many have showgrounds available for no frills camping which we have made use of.

Elliston has a lovely tourist cliff top drive with sculptures scattered along the

also a recognition monument to the indigenous lives lost in the skirmishes with the early pastoralists in the 1800s as the land was opening up to farming.

Up near Wudinna there are many huge granite monoliths which the early settlers made extensive use of to collect rainwater. They surrounded the huge domes with stonework gutters to channel the rain run off into reservoirs. Some wonder why these systems weren't maintained but we seem to be going high tech now with huge desal plants now in the pipeline (excuse the pun). But I guess rainwater would have trouble supplying enough water for the potential mining going on further north in the State

We stayed at Venus Bay for several days and reminded us of a trip we did years ago to this pretty little place. Back in the 80's, our neighbour had a family shack at this fishing village so over a beer or two one night we decided to go over there for a few days. We packed up the Targa, four adults and four kids plus sleeping gear (we slept on a shed floor), food, grog, clothes etc. and travelled 700 kms from Morphett Vale to Venus Bay and had a wonderful time. Would we even contemplate a trip like that these days? I don't think so.

Down at Farm Beach near Coffin Bay they filmed a lot of the scenes from "Gallipoli" and have since built a very good Anzac Memorial in memory of the fallen in WW1 and since. Also there is a parking area where old farm tractors go to die, they use them to launch and retrieve fishing boats off the beach though some don't look like they have run for years.

Aside from the travelling, some of us now have their new Targa Florio scale models and from all reports they sound pretty good. Unfortunately, mine arrived after we had left on our trip so I have that to look forward to on our return. Nutmeg and Aspen Green ones available soon too but I think I'll be happy with just the Omega Navy version.

More next time.....Nigel
